There are 22 factions in X4: Foundations, including Split Vendetta, Cradle of Humanity, and Tides of Avarice DLCs. Of these, 15 can be befriended by the player. Each faction has allies that they will support and enemies that they will compete against. Factions aim to expand their ships and stations, as well as annex entire sectors. Engaging in actions like killing enemies, completing missions for them, or trading at their stations can increase a player's rank with the faction. Conversely, hostile or illegal acts will reduce this rank. Certain factions have initial hostility or restrictions, such as the Xenon and Kha'ak being locked to hostility, while others have lower ranks from the start, like the Scale Plate Pact. The best faction for military types and economy in Star Conflict is subjective and depends on individual preferences. However, many players agree that the Terran faction excels in terms of military strength, with access to a wide range of ships and equipment. On the other hand, the Split faction seems to struggle with economy and resource management, making it challenging for players to sustain a large fleet. The Teladi faction, however, is often praised for its strong economy, which enables players to produce and upgrade a vast array of ships and equipment. In contrast, the Boron faction appears to be at a disadvantage when it comes to shields, engines, and weapons, making them more vulnerable in space combat.

X4 best stations to build. X4 best faction. X4 foundation faction. Best faction fallout 4. X4 foundations best faction ships.
