A smog check is a test required by the state which measures the amount of airborne pollution emitted from the vehicle being tested. Many states including California require vehicle owners to have an smog check run on their vehicles. What type of emissions test and how often you need to have your vehicle smog checked depends mainly on where you live, the type of vehicle you have and the age of the vehicle. You can find out more in our smog check information area. A smog check consists of a visual inspection, a functional test using your vehicles OBD II connection. Depending on the age of your vehicle and the type of fuel it uses you may require an Evap and tailpipe test. If you pass your smog check you will receive a certificate. Regardless of whether you pass or fail the smog station will transmit your test results to the DMV. If you pass you will be able to register your vehicle with the DMV. If you fail, you have a certain amount of time to remedy the issue and test your vehicle again. All vehicles will be visually inspected to verify that the required emissions control equipment and systems are identified and present and in the vehicle and that they appear properly connected. Most vehicles will now go through a functional test using the OBD II connection in your vehicle. Depending on your vehicles age, gross vehicle weight and fuel type additional tests may be performed such as EGR, and EVAP. As of 2015 most vehicles only require OBDII tests. These tests eliminate the tailpipe testing requirement. If your car cannot be OBDII tested then a tailpipe emission sample will be taken by the technical. The test system will analyze the exhaust gases emitted from the tailpipe. Once the test is complete a certificate will be issued and transmitted to the DMV. The transmission currently takes place nightly and so your results may not be available until the following morning. A vehicle that has been regularly maintained and has not been modified from the factory build should have no issues passing a smog test. An engine is also not operating a peak efficiency if it is cold. Driving your vehicle for at least 15 minutes or until the vehicles engine is warm will help the test accurately reflect the operating condition of your engine. If you have had recent service of your vehicle in which the battery was disconnected, the OBD II sensors will have been reset. In these cases you may need to drive your vehicle for a few days before the sensor repopulate with data. You cannot have a smog test done if the OBD II sensor values are empty. Our smog technician will explain why your vehicle didn't pass the test. Test Only locations, cannot service vehicles to repair the issue. You must fix the issue as soon as possible in order to register your vehicle with the DMV. Any auto repair facility can do the service on your vehicle, it does not need to be a test and repair location. The Bureau of Automotive Repair has program in place to assist with replacing your vehicle if the repair is too costly. You can find out more about the Consumer Assistance Program (CAP) at to see if you qualify. Changes of ownership require a smog check, or if the vehicle is being registered in California for the first time. Under California law, the seller of the vehicle is responsible for having the vehicle smog checked prior to sale and providing a certificate of compliance.
