Dreamworker is a retired educator who spent 26 years teaching in high schools and high schools across the country.If you want people to read the articles you write for online consumption, you need to be willing to devote time and effort to working on them. You also need a plan that encourages people to take a look at your articles.Titles should appeal, photos should be creative and should support the subject you are writing about, and themes should meet a need or answer a question.If you can include personal experiences that enhance the point you are making, do so. It's one thing to write about a robbery, but quite another to tell about a personal experience you had when you were robbed.As you can see, there is much more to attracting readers than knowing how to put words together.This article will tell you what I do. If it works for me, it will work for you too!Tips to help you attract more readers to your online articles.FixabayWriters who use incorrect grammar, spelling, structure, and organization will never work well, because they lack the skills to do so.English is an extremely difficult language, even for native speakers, so unless you're sure of your skills, if you can't produce a good job on your own, you really shouldn't try to write online.There are many editing programs available to help people who have problems in this area, but the ones who do it best are those who attended at school and learned what their language teachers taught them!Reprove EverythingNo matter how well you think you've done, always come back and correct. Manage your work. It helps to use a program like your word processor to do this, but always do it.It's easy to make mistakes and mistakes reduce your credibility with readers. Would you accept the medical advice of a writer who Do you know spelling the name of the disease that is discussing? Write what you know so that it can produce produce and meaningful information.MorguefileWrite what you knowIt is very difficult to write articles that flow easily if they are based on research rather than personal experience. The reason is that if you use information that is already available on the web, it is difficult to "turn it around" to make it look like it's yours.On the other hand, if you write down what you know, there is little or no research involved. This frees you up to make your points, but also to add special personal touches that make your work unique and therefore more enjoyable to the reader.She recently wrote an informative article about what things are worth, but in the end, she added a touch to telling the story of how my mother appreciated her $10 wedding ring to the point of turning down a diamond engagement ring she once offered her. I did this to add interest and a personal touch, but also to make the point that value is mostly emotional.Title CarefullyTitle can attract readers or drive them away. They are the first thing they see, so if they don't like or care what they say, they won't click on your article.I'm terrible with titles, so on the advice of one of the moderators on my team, I learned to use . This is a free program that evaluates titles and helps you find one that is more appealing to readers.It's amazing how changing a single word can bring views!Another thing to remember is that the more specific your title is, the more likely it is to attract readers. The difference between "Cars" and "What you need to know about Honda CRVs" is huge!If you keep your title simple and focus on it as you write, your article will be easier to write and easier to read and give your reader what they need.Write at low reading levelsNewspapers are written at sixth grade reading levels. They've been doing this for years, and you should do it. Elegant or difficult words to understand people, people, find the easy-to-read text nice and therefore you are more likely to want to read them.Online readers turn off when they see long stretches of text. If you want to keep your attention, divide the text into short sections and write subtitles for each of them.This way, people who don't want to spend a lot of time reading can browse your subtitles and read only those sections of the text that interest them.Subtitles should also serve as a summary of what is written so that the reader can see the context of what is written. In short, you use your subtitles to tell a story. Someone who navigates them should be able to understand the essence of your article without having to read it all.Use listsA smart online writer always tries to use lists because they are powerful tools that help readers get a good overview of an article and also help the writer organize their work.The best placement is in the introduction, because this is where you tell your reader about what you are going to write. So, after you make your opening statements, you can, for example, tell them that you are going to tell them about all the topics that support your title.For example, if your title is about why people need to train their dogs, you might list things such as training makes dogs easier to control, more acceptable to neighbors, safer, and more pleasant to own. Once this is done, you have created the outline for your text sections, as well as the bases for your titles.Lists can be used at the beginning of your article, as noted above, or within an article to highlight certain points.They are extremely effective and help your readers to clearly understand what you are saying. Add appropriate imagesWhen possible, you should use images to emphasize the points of your They should be very clear, appropriate, well placed, accredited and large enough to stand out.Each must carry a legend that that and somehow relates it to the information of the article.A picture is something that is on the page other than the text, so it doesn't have to be just a picture. You can use videos, surveys, maps, and the like as long as they meet the above criteria.You should never overload an article with images. A few well placed will suffice.Keep it OriginalEach piece of text you place online must be original. Appointment in moderation. Use your own ideas. If you are unable to produce your own videos and images, use those that are available for public use and be sure to credit them properly. While it's true that there's nothing new in the world, this doesn't mean you can't write information in your own words, include personal thoughts and experiences, and do other things to infuse a little more information.You can, and you should!Stay focusedIt's very easy to deviate from the theme when creating articles.The best way to avoid this is to keep reviewing your subject matter to make sure that what you are writing matches it.For example, if you are writing about women who are poor housewives, be careful not to get into a discussion about cleaners that work well. Once you've written, edited and published your article, it's a good idea to promote it.This can be done in several ways, but the simplest is to make an image for use on Pinterest after you have opened an account on that site.For this you need to take your best image and put a text on it that relates to or refers to it. the subject of your article. You will need a photo editor to do this. There are many free ones you can access online, but I suggest you pay the $50 annual fee and log into PicMonkey because I found it to be the easiest to use.You can also open a Facebook page or join a Facebook group, sign up for online groups where people interest in your topic, topic, some research to find out what works best for you, but don't self-promote on those sites. Keep it professional.Evaluate your progressYou should check your charts regularly to see how each article is going.If you see an item losing ground with a view, see if you can upgrade it. If that doesn't work, let him go. It's better to write something fresh and new than to waste time reworking a piece that has something wrong that can't be fixed.Items that are too competitive, have little content, or are poorly assembled are examples that you probably won't be able to save.There are reasons why writing fails or succeeds. It is your job to find out what that reason is and make the appropriate changes.Give the readers what they want Most importantly, you need to give the readers what they want. If you don't, none of the other things mentioned here will matter.This article is about what you can do to improve readership. You're reading it because you want tips that will help you do it. That's why you came here. If I don't give you this information, you will stop reading and not come back.People have all sorts of interests, and it's up to you to take advantage of them so that your opinions rise.All this is a lot to remember, but if you take the time to print this article and check it regularly, you will probably see an improvement.Good luck!This content is accurate and true to the best of the author's knowledge and is not intended to replace formal, individualized advice from a qualified professional. © 2019 Sondra Rochelle Rochelle
