There are two approaches to using the command line: Specify one or more conversion tasks in the conversion job. Specify the conversion task in detail. A Transform Job can be easily created using the Convert XLS GUI. All job information is stored in a single conversion job file (for example, 'c:\myjobs\Do-Multi-Step-Conversion.SII'). Specifying a transformation work file on the command line is very easy with the /J switch. A conversion job file can contain hundreds or thousands of tasks running at the same time. Example: ConvertXLS.EXE /J"D:\My Conversion Job Files\AccountingBatch.SII" Specifying a single conversion job requires more effort, but does not require you to create a conversion job file first. The documentation has a huge number of detailed examples that are well organized. So when you specify a conversion task from the command line, you need to find your specific case and adapt it to your needs. Again, a complete list of examples can be found in the documentation. Below are the most commonly used examples. You can easily convert XLS files to EXCEL with this online tool. In addition, the online PDF converter offers many other features.
