Under the old Blueprint for a Safer Economy framework, each California county has been assigned to a risk level. Based on their rate of positivity, the adjusted case rate and/or health equity (for counties with populations more than 106,000), counties face different levels of activity and capacity restrictions. The weekly status was shown on a map with four level colors: purple, red, orange and yellow. Blueprint was the reality of California from August 2020 to June 2021, but it is no longer in effect. (CNN)Fear is climbing for women and girls in Afghanistan after the Taliban told women who work to stay at home, admitting they were not safe in the presence of soldiers of the militant group. The Taliban spokesman Zabiullah Mujahid said at a press conference on Tuesday that women should not go to work for their own safety, undermining the group's efforts to convince international observers that the group would be more tolerant to women than when they were in power. Education came the same day when the World Bank interrupted funding in Afghanistan, citing women's security concerns, and within hours of the UN requesting a "transparent and rapid investigation" on human rights abuse reports after the acquisition of Taliban. Mujahid said that the guide to stay at home would be temporary, and would allow the group to find ways to ensure that women are not "treated in an unrespectful way" or "God forbid, hurt." He admitted that the measure was necessary because the Taliban soldiers "hold change and are not trained. "We are happy for them to enter the buildings, but we want to make sure they don't worry," he said. "So, we asked them to take free time from work until the situation returns to a normal order and the procedures related to women are in place, then they can return to their work once it is announced. "When the last in power between 1996 and 2001 the militant group banned women from the workplace, prevented them from leaving the house uncarried and forced them to cover their entire body. The group insisted on its new leadership will be more moderate, but Taliban leaders refused to guarantee women's rights will not be removed and many have already faced violence. The World Bank announced on Tuesday that financial support for Afghanistan is being stopped in the midst of concerns about the fate of women under the Taliban rule, facing another blow to an economy that relies heavily on foreign aid. "We are deeply concerned about the situation in Afghanistan and the impact on the country's development prospects, especially for women," said Marcela Sanchez-Bender, World Bank spokesman, in a statement to CNN. And five women from Afghanistan's renowned robotic team arrived in Mexico on Tuesday, after humanitarian visas were released. In the first months of rebirthin Afghanistan, women were increasingly isolated from society and many were the targets of harassment and attacks -- including high-profile murder of three female journalists in March. At the beginning of July, the insurgents entered the offices of Azi Bank in the southern city of Kandahar and ordered nine women working there to leave, Reuters reported. Women's bank casesHe said the male relatives would take their place. In the midst of a growing concern of the international community, the United Nations called for a "transparent and rapid investigation" on human rights abuses "committed by all parties to the conflict" on Tuesday, after an emergency meeting of its Human Rights Council. But the agency was condemned by a number of non-profit organizations for parsing its language after the adoption of the resolution, initially proposed by Pakistan. John Fisher, director of Geneva at Human Rights Watch, said in a statement that the UN "has tried to create a strong human rights monitoring body and to meet its responsibility to protect the Afghan people." He said that the resolution "is a slap in front of Afghan human rights defenders and women rights activists who are looking at horror as the state of law crumbles around them. "The Taliban also warned on Tuesday that the United States must respect the deadline of next week to go out, and said that "they no longer allowed the evacuation of Afghans", although a family source told CNN on Wednesday that the apparent ban had not yet had a discernible effect on arrivals at Kabul airport. The source said that some priority local Afghans would receive help in the coming hours, the source said, although some candidates for the Special Immigrant Visa (SIV) program -- a avenue for Afghans who worked for the U.S. forces and agencies to get out of the country -- should wait. The Pentagon announced on Wednesday that a total of 19,000 evacuates left Afghanistan in the last 24 hours, including 11,200 people flying on 42 US military aircraft and 7,800 evacuated by coalition partners. The number of evacuations was slightly lower than the previous day, when the United States reported that 21,000 people were evacuated from Kabul airport by 37 US military flights carrying 12,700 evacuated, as well as 57 coalition flights carrying 8,900 people. "Since the United States and the coalition forces have started evacuation until now about 88,000 have left safely from Afghanistan," Deputy Director of the Joint Staff for Regional Operations Army Maj. General William "Hank" Taylor said in a news briefing Wednesday. "Every 39 minutes yesterday, a plane left Kabul airport." Taylor said that there were more than 10,000 people waiting for the airport to leave, but that the number would change as more people arrive at the airport and as flights leave. A hectic Western evacuation operation at Kabul Airport provided the only weak opportunity for many Afghans to escape the country in recent days, and the crowd outsidestructure has been inflated since militants took power. But US President Joe Biden has reiterated that he intends to comply with his expiry of 31 August to withdraw troops from Afghanistan until the Taliban interrupt the ongoing evacuation operations or access to the airport. Nick Paton Walsh of CNN, Sarah Dean, Sheena McKenzie, Jeremy Diamond, Sharon Braithwaite and Matt Egan helped bring back. report. report.
