The tire load index is © number assigned that corresponds to the maximum weight that a tire can withstand when it © properly inflated. The higher the number of the tire load index, the higher the load capacity. Choosing a tire with a load index smaller than the original equipment specifications means that the tire will not load the load capacity of the original. The load index information can be found on the side wall of your tire, listed after the tire size information. See the illustration of the tire load index showing an example of its location©. See below for more details on the light truck load index. See the product. Do not mix and match tires with different speed ratings on your vehicle. Speed-rated tires should be replaced in sets of 4, and there is no problem in using a higher rating tire on your vehicle than recommended.
